

THE CHOLA TEMPLES

ARCHAEOLOGICAL SURVEY OF INDIA

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2018 with funding from Public.Resource.Org

THE CHOLA TEMPLES

THAÑJĀVŪR
GAṆGAIKONḌACHOLĀPURAM & DĀRĀSURAM

By
C. SIVARAMAMURTI

Sixth Edition

PUBLISHED BY THE DIRECTOR GENERAL
ARCHAEOLOGICAL SURVEY OF INDIA
NEW DELHI
2004

First Edition 1960
Second Edition 1973
Third Edition 1978
Fourth Edition 1984
Fifth Edition 1992
Sixth Edition 2004

©

2004

ARCHAEOLOGICAL SURVEY OF INDIA
Government of India

Price : Rs. 25.00

Printed At : BENGAL OFFSET WORKS, 335, Khajoor Road, Karol Bagh, New Delhi-110 005.

CONTENTS

	PAGE
General information	1
History	3
Architecture	8
Bṛihadiśvara temple, Thaṅjāvūr	14
Bṛihadiśvara temple, Gaṅgaikoṇḍacholapuram	22
Airāvateśvara temple, Dārāsuram	28
Appendix: Stories of Śaiva saints depicted at Dārāsuram	40
Glossary	47
Bibliography	48

LIST OF PLATES

- I. Bṛihadiśvara temple, Thaṅjāvūr
- II. Bṛihadiśvara temple, Thaṅjāvūr: A, Bhikshāṭana-mūrti; B, Ālīṅgana-Chandraśekhara-mūrti: C, dvāra-pāla
- III. Bṛihadiśvara temple, Thaṅjāvūr: Kālāntaka
- IV. Bṛihadiśvara temple, Thaṅjāvūr: musicians (painting)
- V. Bṛihadiśvara temple, Thaṅjāvūr: Rājarāja and his guru (painting)
- VI. Bṛihadiśvara temple, Gaṅgaikoṇḍacholapuram
- VII. Bṛihadiśvara temple, Gaṅgaikoṇḍacholapuram: Chaṇḍeśānugraha-mūrti
- VIII. Bṛihadiśvara temple, Gaṅgaikoṇḍacholapuram: A, Naṭarāja; B, Śiva burning Manmatha
- IX. Bṛihadiśvara temple, Gaṅgaikoṇḍacholapuram: A, Brahmā; B, Kārttikeya
- X. Bṛihadiśvara temple, Gaṅgaikoṇḍacholapuram: navagrahas
- XI. Airāvateśvara temple, Dārāsuram
- XII. Airāvateśvara temple, Dārāsuram: maṇḍapa
- XIII. Airāvateśvara temple, Dārāsuram: A, female chauri-bearer; B, Kaṅkāla-mūrti
- XIV. Airāvateśvara temple, Dārāsuram: wives of ṛishis

THE CHOĻA TEMPLES

THAÑJĀVŪR GAṄGAIKONḌACHOĻAPURAM & DĀRĀSURAM

GENERAL INFORMATION

THAÑJĀVUR ($10^{\circ} 46' 59''$ N; $79^{\circ} 07''$ E), the headquarters of the District of that name, lies about 322 km to the south-west of Chennai and is connected directly by rail or road via Kumbakonam from Chennai. The main temple of the place, the Bṛihadīśvara, is about 1.5 km from the Ariyalur railway-station. The accommodation ranging from economy to luxury is available at Thaṇjāvur run both by Tamil Nadu Tourism Development Corporation and by the Private Agencies, besides a Circuit House maintained by the Government of Tamil Nadu.

Gangaikonda Cholaapuram ($11^{\circ} 12' 22''$ N; $79^{\circ} 26' 58''$ E) in Udyārpālayam taluk of Perumbalur district, is situated about 260 km from Chennai and about 70 km from Perumbalur and 36 km from Kumbakonam. A visitor from Chennai may take the train or buses to Kumbakonam from where regular bus services ply to the place. Kumbakonam has private lodging facilities of a moderate kind.

THE CHOLA TEMPLES

Dārāsuraṃ ($10^{\circ}46'59''\text{N}; 79^{\circ}21'25''\text{E}$) is located 5 km from Kumbakonam, almost at its outskirts. As mentioned above Kumbakonam is directly connected by road and rail from Chennai. Among these monuments the Br̥hadiśvara Temple at Thaṇjāvur has been inscribed in the World Heritage List by UNESCO.

These monuments are open to public daily from sunrise to sun set. Photography of the exteriors of the monuments by using still cameras without stand, with synchronised flash is permitted. All other forms of photography/videography require permission from the Superintending Archaeologist, Chennai Circle, Archaeological Survey of India, Fort St. George, Chennai-600 009.

HISTORY

The Chōlas of Thaṅjāvūr (ninth to twelfth centuries) were great conquerors, who were not only paramount in south India but for some time extended their sway as far as the river Gaṅgā in the north and brought Sri Lanka, a part of Burma, the Malayan peninsula and some islands of south-east Asia under their influence. They were also mighty builders, who erected a large number of temples in their empire, some of them constituting the finest specimens of south Indian architecture. Inheritors of the Pallava tradition, the edifices also reflect the power and genius of their authors.

Karikāla, the early Chōla emperor of the Śaṅgam age, is lost in legendary grandeur. It was several centuries later that Vijayālaya, in circa 850, established a small kingdom around Thaṅjāvūr, which developed into a gigantic empire under his successors. In the time of Āditya and Parāntaka, the son and grandson respectively of Vijayālaya, there was a great temple-building activity. Parāntaka ruled for forty-eight years. Bearing such heroic titles as viraśoḷan and samara-kesarī, he extended his dominions by conquests. As the conqueror of the Pāṇḍyas, who ruled further south at Madurai, and of Sri Lanka he was styled Maduraiyum Iḷamum-koṇḍa, i.e., one who captured Madurai and Sri Lanka. He was a great devotee of Śiva in the Chidambaram temple, which he covered with gold. That he was also a great scholar and patron of literature is suggested by his title paṇḍita-vatsala. He had sons who inherited his qualities but were unfortunately short-lived. His eldest son, Rājāditya, while almost defeating the Rāshtrakūṭa king, Kṛishṇa III, died on the battle-field on his elephant at the moment of victory. His younger brother was Gaṇḍarāditya, whose queen, widowed early with a little child in her arms, was a pious lady, remarkable for her generous practice of building and endowing temples.

THE CHOĻA TEMPLES

This was a weak period in Choḷa history, when Kṛishṇa III asserted his power in Toṇḍai-maṇḍalam, and, the son of Gaṇḍarāditya being just a babe, Ariñjaya, the younger brother of Gaṇḍarāditya, ascended the throne. But he soon lost his life on the battle-field in trying to regain the lost territory from the Rāshtrakūṭas. His son, Sundara-Choḷa, who succeeded him, was a great warrior and a just ruler. Like his grandfather Parāntaka, he was a great patron of literature. His last days were clouded by the sad assassination of his war-like eldest son Āditya. His second son, Rājarāja, was then a youth, accomplished and powerful; but the nobility of Rājarāja was such that even though desired by his subjects, he refused to ascend the throne, as his uncle Uttama-Choḷa, the son of Gaṇḍarāditya, now quite grown up, longed for it. Rājarāja eventually succeeded Uttama-Choḷa.

Rājarāja I, known as Rājakesarī Arumolivarman, ascended the throne in 985 and was probably the greatest of the Choḷa emperors. His military triumph, organization of the empire, patronage of art and literature and religious tolerance are partially eclipsed by the achievements of his son Rājendra, who was a great military genius. As the Choḷa kingdom had just recovered from the onslaught of the Rāshtrakūṭas, Rājarāja started his reign. with military campaigns to strengthen his position. He brought low the Keralas, Pāṇḍyas and Siṃhalas, overcame the western hilly tracts, Mysore and Gaṅgavāḍi. He also overcame the Chālukya king Satyāśraya, the large treasures captured from whom were utilized in the enrichment of the temple as Thaṅjāvūr. As a sagacious conqueror, Rājarāja gave his daughter Kundavai in marriage to Vimalāditya, whose elder brother Śaktivarman, the Eastern Chālukya king, was under his protection. He sent his son Rājendra to Kalinga and established a pillar of victory on the Mahendra hill. With his mighty navy, Rājarāja conquered the Maldives, besides a number of other islands, and crippled the power of the Cheras known for their naval strength. He was a great builder and erected at Thaṅjāvūr the magnificent temple known as the Bṛihadiśvara or Rājarājeśvara.

Rājarāja was followed by his equally brilliant son Rājendra (1012-44), undoubtedly the greatest ruler of his line, who asserted his power in Sri Lanka, the Chera and the Pāṇḍya countries and Vanavāsi and overcame the Chālukya Jayasimha. He then turned his eyes to the north in his desire to bring to his kingdom the waters of the sacred river Gaṅgā by the might of his arm. In less than two years, Rājendra successfully overcame the Eastern Chālukya territory, Kalinga and Dakṣiṇa-Kosala and overcome the Pāla king Mahīpāla of east India.

To celebrate his triumph, Rājendra created 'a liquid pillar of victory' (jalamaya-stambha) in his new capital at Gaṅgaikoṇḍacholapuram, 'the city of the Chola, the bringer of the Gaṅgā'. In a great irrigation tank, now in ruins, the waters of the Gaṅga were poured from pots brought by the vassal-kings as the only tribute demanded by the emperor, who then assumed the title of Gaṅgaikōṇḍachōḷa, 'the Chōḷa king who brought the Gaṅgā'. As thanksgiving, he erected a large temple in honour of Śiva, also known as the Brīhadiśvara, at his capital.

THE CHOĻA TEMPLES

Rājendra then utilized his mighty navy for attacking and subduing the Śailendra king Saṅgrā mavijayottuṅgavarman of Śrīvijaya (Sumatra-Java). A number of place-names mentioned in his inscriptions have been understood as connoting places mostly in Malaya, included in the empire of Śrīvijaya. His conquest of Burma, the islands in the Eastern Archipelago, Sri Lanka, Lakshadweep and Maldives clearly proves the efficiency of his unparalleled naval power. His great scholarship and literary attainments earned him the title paṇḍita-Chōḷa. The marriage of his daughter Ammaṅgādevī to his own nephew, the Eastern Chālukya king Rājarāja, shows his diplomatic genius. The child born of this marriage was the great Rājendra-Chōḷa Kulottuṅga.

Kulottuṅga succeeded his maternal uncles Rājādhirāja and Vīrarājendra in 1070 and ruled over a large empire that combined the Chōḷa and Chālukya dominions. He was powerful not only on land but on sea. His power was felt even in distant Kaliṅga. Vikrama-Chōḷa succeeded Rājendra-Chōḷa.

Kulottuṅga II, the son of Vikrama-Chōḷa effected elaborate renovations at the temple at Chidambaram. This building-activity was sustained in the reign of his son Rājarāja II (1150-73), whose title Rāja-gambhīra is recorded in the maṇḍapa of the Dārāsuram temple. The growing zeal of the royal house in Śaivism is manifest in the stories of the Śaiva saints at Dārāsuram.

HISTORY

Rājarāja's nephew, Rājādhirāja, was followed by Kulottuṅga III, the last of the great Chōḷa emperors, who, by his power and personality, checked the forces of disruption that had been steadily eating into the vitals of the empire. He was a great builder, and his region is marked by several additions to the glorious chapter of Chōḷa architecture. His hand is evident not only in the Kampahareśvara temple at Tribhuvanam, the most important monument of his reign, but also at Kāñchi, Madurai, Chidambaram, Tiruvārūr, Tiruviḍaimarudūr and Dārāsuram.

ARCHITECTURE

To understand the architecture of the Chōla temples, it is essential to know something of the pre- and post-Chōla architecture. The Pallava temples of the seventh to the ninth centuries, the earliest in south India, have certain features which differentiate them from the later ones. As Jouveau-Dubreuil has very clearly illustrated, the niche, the pavilion, the pillar- and pilaster-corbel and the horseshoe-shaped windows (kūḍu), among others, are the most important factors which help in the ascertainment of the dates of the monuments.

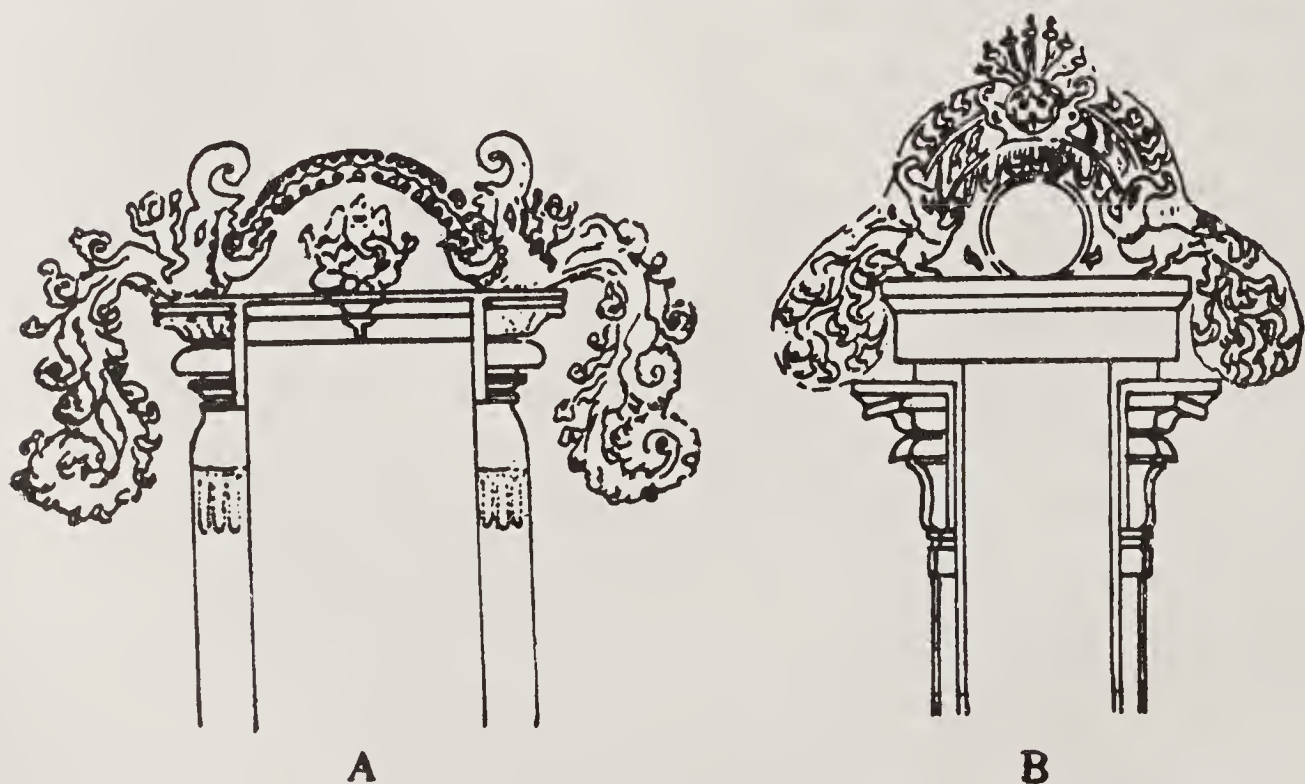

FIG. 1. Niches: A, Pallava ; B, Chōla. (After Jouveau-Dubreuil)

¹G. Jouveau-Dubreuil, Archéologie du sud de l'Inde, pt. i (Paris, 1914), pp. 71-145.

ARCHITECTURE

A typical niche (fig. 1) in the earlier Pallava rock-cut monuments at Mahābalipuram and in the Kailāsanātha temple at Kāñchīpuram is rather wide, and the makara-toraṇa decoration on the niche-top is flat, the floriated tail of the makara overflowing on the sides; but in a Chōḷa niche, as in the later Pallava ones, the space is narrower and the decoration on the niche-top more round. The simulated railings for the pavilions on monuments at Mahābalipuram are quite different from their Chōḷa counterparts. The kūḍu (fig. 2) which at the Mahābalipuram monuments has a shovel-headed finial, FIG. 2 Kūḍus: A, Pallava; B, Chōḷa ; C, Vijayanagara.

(After Jouveau-Dubreuil)

FIG. 3. Pillar-capitals: A, Pallava; B, Chōḷa; C, Vijayanagara.
Top row, oblique view; bottom row, side view. (After Jouveau-Dubreuil)

THE CHOLA TEMPLES

FIG. 4. Pillars: A, Pallava; B, Chola; C, Vijayanagara.
(After Jouveau-Dubreuil)

develops a lion-head in the Chola monuments, and this continues thereafter.

The capital of the pillar (figs. 3 and 4) and pilaster in the Chola monuments, rectangular with its sides cut off in a slant at 45°, has the central portion projecting. It is from this that the later Vijayanagara lotus-corbels develop. It is easily seen that without the central projecting block the Chola corbel is not essentially different from the early Pallava one, where the same angle also occurs in addition to the rounded corbel.

ARCHITECTURE

The central shrine in the Pallava structural temples, like the Kailāsanātha at Kāñchipuram, is prominent and the gopura is quite dwarfish. In the early Chōla temples the shrine is magnified, and in the time of Rājarāja and his successors it becomes colossal, as one notices in the temples at Thaṅjāvūr, Gaṅgaikoṇḍacholapuram, Dārāsuram and Tribhuvanam. The gopura in the early Chōla temples, though larger in size than in the Pallava ones, is still comparatively short, and it is only in the late Chōla period that gigantic gopuras come into being and dwarf the central shrine.

The earlier Pallava dvāra-pālas (door-keepers), with a very natural look and mostly with a single pair of arms, are replaced in the Chōla structures by those with a fierce mien and four arms, the ones in the Thaṅjāvūr and Gaṅgaikoṇḍacholapuram temples being typical examples: they carry the triśūla (trident) on their crowns, bear tusks protruding from their mouths and strike terror with their knit eye-brows, rolling eyes and hands always in the tarjanī (threatening) and vismaya (wonder) attitudes.

In the large Chōla temples, long flights of steps from the sides lead to the platform, whence one enters the sanctum; the balustrade is massive, curls up at the end and is decorated on the exterior. Alternating koshṭha-pañjaras and kumbha-pañjaras (fig. 5) form a regular feature of the decoration, and the niches are flanked by pilasters crowned on the top by a curved roof-moulding adorned by two kūdus with crowning lion-heads. The base of the entire series of these niches has yāli-decoration and at corners and intervals there are makara-heads with warriors in action issuing from their mouths. The pavilions are usually two pañjaras flanking a śālā (wagon-roof pavilion), the former with a single finial and the latter with three. The kumbha-pañjara itself shows stages of development, and the earlier and simpler ones, which we find in the early Chola temples, become more decorative and developed in the later ones.

THE CHOLA TEMPLES

FIG. 5. Koshtha-pañjara (left portion) and kumbha-pañjara (right portion). (After Jouveau-Dubreuil)

ARCHITECTURE

Separate maṇḍapas, which form a regular feature in the late Chola and Vijayanagara temples, with a number of pillars adorning them, are not so prominent in the early Chola structures, though the front of the temple is a long maṇḍapa for different forms of bhoga-worship. A large courtyard and small shrine against the enclosure-wall at the cardinal and inter-cardinal points for the dik-pālas (guardians of the directions) form a feature in the early Chola examples.

The following pages describe three of the most important Chola temples, viz., the two Br̥hadīśvara temples, respectively built by Rājarāja I (985-1012) and Rājendra (1012-44) at Thaṇjavūr and Gaṅgaikoṇḍa-cholapuram, and the Airāvateśvara temple, built by Vīrarājendra (1063-69) or Rājarāja II (1150-73) at Dārāsūram.

BRIHADĪŚVARA TEMPLE, THAÑJĀVŪR

Thañjāvūr attained prominence under the Chōlas in the ninth century; Vijayālaya, the first great ruler of the dynasty (850-71), having captured it and made it his capital. The Bṛihadīśvara temple is a symbol of the greatness of the Chōla empire under its author, emperor Rājarāja (985-1012), whose splendour it reflects. The long series of epigraphs incised in elegant letters on the plinth all round the gigantic edifice reveals the personality of the emperor.

The Bṛihadīśvara temple (pl. I) is a monument dedicated to Śiva, whom the emperor established here and named Rājarājeśvaram-uḍayār after himself. As we gather from the inscriptions running throughout the plinth, the king, on the two hundred and seventy-fifth day of the twenty-fifth year of the reign (1010), presented a gold-covered finial to be planted on the top of the vimāna of the temple.

The temple is the most ambitious of the architectural enterprises of the Chōlas and is a fitting symbol of the magnificent achievements of Rājarāja. The endowments that he made for his temple were numerous and in his munificence he was joined by not only the members of his family but high officials and noblemen. Several large images in bronze and gold were presented to this temple, and their ornaments, described in detail in the inscriptions, give a vivid picture of the contemporary jewellers' art. Even though most of the images and all the jewels have now disappeared, there are still some exquisite bronzes, representing Naṭarāja, Tripurāntaka, Devī and Gaṇeśa, to give an idea of what great art-treasures were originally housed in the temple. True to his surname, Śivapādaśekhara, Rājarāja spared nothing for embellishing and endowing the great institution, and in this his sister Kundavai and other members of his family fully associated themselves. The endowments, together with the mention of even small weights and measures, the custom and method of receiving, maintaining and paying amounts or interest on amounts of donation for the regular conduct of special items of worship or for burning a lamp and similar details, give a vivid idea of the economic conditions of the time.

Fine arts were encouraged in the service of the temple: the sculptures, the paintings in the dark passages of the sanctum and even the inscriptions in elegant Choḷa Grantha and Tamil letters give an idea of the great art that flourished under Rājarāja. Dance and music were greatly cultivated and were equally employed to serve the temple: every evening it was at once an entertainment and a ritual that the townsfolk, assembled in the maṇḍapa, witnessed and enjoyed during the ceremony of the waving of lights and the chanting of the Veda and Devāram hymns. Cooks, gardeners, flower-gatherers, garland-makers, musicians, drummers, dancers, dance-masters, wood-carvers, sculptors, painters, choir-groups for singing hymns in Sanskrit and Tamil, accountants, watchmen and a host of other officials and servants of the temple—all are referred to in the inscriptions as having been endowed with adequate grants of land. Taking just a single fact, that Rājarāja constructed two long streets (talichcheri) for the accommodation of four hundred dancing women attached to the temple, we can well imagine the lavish scale on which he endowed the temple and its functions. The annual income from the lands set apart for the temple alone is estimated as one hundred and sixteen thousand kalams of paddy. The emperor's presentations in silver, gold and cash, not to mention various other gifts, form a staggering account of liberality.

The temple is constructed of granite, mostly of large blocks, a rock which is not available in the neighbourhood and had therefore to be brought from a distance—itself a colossal task. The plinth of the central shrine is 45·72 square m, the shrine proper 30·48 square m and the vimāna 60·96 m high. On the massive plinth, covered throughout with inscriptions, there are niches on three sides in two rows, containing representations of deities such as Śiva, Viṣṇu and Durgā. On the southern wall the lower niches contain Gaṇeśa, Viṣṇu with Śrī-devī and Bhū-devī, Lakshmī, a pair of dvāra-pālas (pl. II C), Viṣṇuanugraha-mūrti, Bhikṣhāṭana (pl. II A), Vīrabhadra, a pair of dvāra-pālas, Dakṣiṇā-mūrti, Kālāntaka (pl. III) and Naṭeśa. In the lower niches on the west are Hari-Hara, Ardhanārīśvara, a pair of dvāra-pālas and two Chandraśekharas, one with and the other without halo. On the north, in the lower series, are Ardhanārīśvara, Gaṅgādhara, a pair of dvāra-pālas, Vīrabhadra (without the usual moustache but with a sword and shield),

THAÑJĀVŪR

Āliṅgana-Chandraśekhara (pl. II B), Śiva holding a śūla (spear), a pair of dvāra-pālas, Sarasvatī, Mahishamardini and Bhairava. Of these, the first and last pairs of dvāra-pālas and the first and last four forms in niches are on the front porch of the temple, while all the rest are on the main walls of the vimāna. The top series shows a number of Tripurāntakas repeated in each niche. In the small circular space of the niche-tops are again carvings of deities like Gaṇeśa, Vṛishavāhana, Bhikshāṭana, Narasiṃha, Varāha, etc.

As we enter the temple from the east, there is a flight of steps leading to a pillared maṇḍapa, which is a later addition, so that originally the dvāra-pālas on either side and the princely warriors in the niches faced the visitor. Apart from the maṇḍapa and the steps leading to it, there are two other flights of steps on the north and south, as also between the front porch and the main shrine on either side. The Nandis on the vimāna, seated sideways but with their heads turned to the front, remind us of their counterparts at Mahābalipuram.

The stone constituting the huge śikhara, which is said to weigh 81.284 tonnes, is popularly believed to have been raised to its present height by being dragged on an inclined plane, which had its base at a place known as Sārapallam ('elevation from depression'), 6.44 km away.

The vast inner courtyard of the temple is about 152.40 × 76.20m and is surrounded by a cloister. At the entrance there are two gopuras, widely separated from each other, the first larger but the second one better decorated. The carvings on the latter, guarded by two monolithic dvāra-pālas, illustrate Śaivite stories like the marriage of Śiva and Pārvatī, Śiva protecting Mārkaṇḍeya and Arjuna winning the pāśupata weapon. Beyond the gopuras, in the court facing the central shrine and under the canopy of a maṇḍapa added in recent times, is a huge monolithic Nandi, indeed a fitting vehicle for the colossal liṅga installed in the central shrine, the height of which is more than 3.66 m. As is stated in the inscription, this liṅga was called āḍavallān, 'one who can dance well', and dakṣiṇa-meru-viṭaṅkan—names associated with the deity at Chidambaram, whom the Cholas greatly revered, and, adopted by them for this liṅga, which is also known, after Rājarāja, as Rājarājeśvaramuḍayār.

THE CHOLA TEMPLES

The dark passage surrounding the sanctum of the temple contains important specimens of sculptural art. Here there are three colossal sculptures, respectively located in the south, west and north and representing Śiva as holding a spear, seated Śiva carrying a sword and trident and with fierce mien and Śiva with ten arms dancing in the chatura pose as Viṣṇu plays the drum and Devī sits in padmāsana with a lotus-bud and rosary in her hands.

The entire wall-space and ceiling of the passage were originally covered with exquisite paintings, most of them now obscured by a coat of painting executed during the Nāyaka period in the seventeenth century. The original paintings, have almost been exposed. On the western side, the entire wall-space is occupied by a huge panel in which Śiva as Dakṣiṇā-mūrti is shown seated on tiger-skin in a yogic pose approximating the mahārāja-līlā with the paryāṅka-bandha or yoga-paṭṭa across his waist and right knee, interestedly watching the dance of two apsarases (celestial nymphs), while Viṣṇu, dwarf gaṇas and other celestial musicians play on the drum and other instruments (pl. IV), a few princely figures watch the scene and two saints, Sundara and Cheramān, hurry to the spot on elephant and horse. Up and further away is depicted a temple (architecturally a typical early Chola one) with Naṭarāja enshrined in it, outside which are seated princely devotees. Further down is painted the story of how Śaiva came down in the form of an old man with a document in his hand to establish his right to carry away Sundara on his marriage-day to his abode at Tiruveṇṇainallūr. Still below is a lively scene of women cooking and food being served during the marriage-festivity. Beyond this, on the other side of the wall, is a large figure of Naṭarāja dancing in the golden hall at Chidambaram with priests and other devotees on one side and a stately prince, obviously Rājarāja, and three of his queens with followers including kañchukis and other attendants carrying rods of office behind them. On the opposite wall are some charming miniature figures of graceful women. A little further up is Rājarāja with his guru Karuvūr Devar (pl. V). Beyond this, on the wall opposite the northern one and facing the passage, are five heads peeping out of a partially-exposed painting.

THAÑJĀVŪR

The entire northern wall is covered by a gigantic figure of Tripurāntaka Śiva on a chariot driven by Brahmā. Tripurāntaka, accompanied by Kārttikeya on peacock, Gaṇeśa on mouse and Kālī on lion, with Nandi in front of the chariot, is in the ālīḍha pose of a warrior with eight arms, all carrying weapons and in the act of using a mighty bow to overcome a host of aggressive and fearless demons with their womenfolk clinging to them. This painting is the greatest masterpiece of the Choḷa artist, distinguished by its power, grandeur, rhythm and composition and unparalleled by any contemporary painting or sculpture.

THE CHOĻA TEMPLES

This representation of Śiva shows the earlier Pallava tradition, as in the Choḷa period Tripurāntaka generally stands in the ābhaṅga and sometimes in the tribhaṅga pose, with one of his legs planted on the head of either the dwarf Apasmāra or a lion. This great panel portrays several sentiments in one; the heroic sentiment in the expression on Tripurāntaka's face and form and in that of the vigorous rākshasas in action; the emotion of pity in the sorrowful faces of their women clinging to them in despair; the spirit of wonder in the paraphernalia of gods surrounding Śiva; and the sense of the grotesque in the attitude of the dwarf gaṇas and of Gaṇeśa hastening on his mouse. The Choḷas being great warriors and conquerors, and Rājarāja himself the greatest of them all, it is in the fitness of things that the theme of Tripurāntaka, the mighty warrior-god, is glorified here, virtually as the keynote of the Choḷa power.

The colours in the paintings are soft and subdued, the lines firm and sinewy and the expression vivid and true of life; above all, there is an ease in the charming contours of the figures. They constitute the most valuable document of the painter's art during the days of the early

THAÑJĀVŪR

Cholas, and it is interesting to note that all the grace of south Indian classical painting that is seen in the earlier Pallava paintings at Śittannavāśal, Panamalai and Kāñchīpuram is continued in the present series.

The highest achievement in plastic art in the Chola period is revealed in the fine series of the one hundred and eight dance-poses carved all around the inner walls of the first floor of the temple. They form an invaluable document in the history of Indian art and are the predecessor of the labelled dance-poses on the Chidambaram gopuras, with the important difference that at Thaṇjāvūr, Śiva himself, the lord of dance (Naṭarāja), is depicted as the dancer.

The temples of Devī near the Nandi-maṇḍapa and of Subrahmaṇya are later additions, the former during the time of Konerinmaikoṇḍān, a Pāṇḍya, of the thirteenth century, and the latter during the Nāyaka period in the seventeenth century. The shrine of Gaṇeśa and the maṇḍapa of Naṭarāja are also very late in date. The temple of Subrahmaṇya has exquisite carvings and is an excellent example of south Indian temple-architecture in the late medieval period.

BRIHADIŚVARA TEMPLE, GAṄGAIKONḌA- CHOLAPURAM

The great monument at Gaṅgaikonḍacholapuram, the second Brīhadiśvara Gaṅgaikonḍacholeśvara temple (pl. VI), rears its head nobly and bespeaks the imperial dignity of the capital that Rājendra (1012-44), the son of Rājarāja, established after his victorious march to east India up to the river Gaṅgā. The capital itself has disappeared: even the palace where the emperor dwelt does not exist except in ruins marked by brick débris about 1·5 km away from the temple, at a place known as Uḷkoṭṭai, where a mound even now called Māligaimēḍu, 'palace-mound', supplies bricks to the villages. In the vicinity is another village with a large tank known as Toṭṭikuḷam excavated by the king. About 1·5 km to the south of the temple is a third village, Vānaḍipaṭṭam, 'place of fireworks', which is believed to be the place where fireworks for the temple-festivals were prepared. Yet another place, Meikāvalpuṭtūr, 1·5 km to the east, is so named as it was the place for the watchman of the temple. A fifth village, 1·5 km beyond the last one, is called Tīrthakuḷam, which had the teppakuḷam, the tank for floating the barge in the festivals of the temple. About 3km to the west is the large water-reservoir known as Ponneri, now all in ruins. In this or in the reservoir outside the gopura of the temple, which is also dilapidated, must have been poured the sacred waters of the Gaṅgā, which Rājendra caused to be brought from east India.

At the temple itself a ruined gopura greets the visitor: it is in the inner compound-wall of the temple, the outer and larger wall, with its gopuras, having been despoiled long ago. On entering through the gopura, one sees, beyond the bali-pīṭha, a huge bull, which, unlike its counterpart at Thaṅjāvūr, is not monolithic. Two flights of steps, on the northern and southern sides, as at Thaṅjāvūr, lead up to two dvāra-pālas—huge monoliths that guard the first entrance to a long closed maṇḍapa. The plinth of the entire maṇḍapa up to the ardha-maṇḍapa and mukha-maṇḍapa of the main temple is a part of the original structure itself, though its wall appears to have been renovated; the pillars and the platform are later additions.

The ardha-maṇḍapa of the temple is approached by two flights of steps from the north and south. Here the mukha-maṇḍapa is guarded on either side by two pairs of dvāra-pālas, and a third pair may be seen at the entrance to the east leading on from the main maṇḍapa to the mukha-maṇḍapa. Yet another pair of colossal dvāra-pālas guards the entrance to the sanctum. In the mukha-maṇḍapa, the walls on the east, on either side, are decorated with carvings representing Śiva in different aspects of anugraha (favour), such as Viṣṇvānugraha-mūrti (bestowing grace on Viṣṇu who worships him with his lotus-eye), Rāvaṇānugraha-mūrti (blessing Rāvaṇa who is penitent after having raised mount Kailāsa), Devyanugraha-mūrti (bestowing grace on Devī who worships the liṅga), Kalyāṇasundara-mūrti (going forth for his marriage attended by his bhūta-gaṇas, goblins, and the marriage itself with all the incidental rejoicing and merry-making), Mārkaṇḍeyānugrahamūrti (blessing his devotee Mārkaṇḍeya by rescuing him from Yama, the god of death, whom he overcame) and Chaṇḍeśānugraha-mūrti (blessing Chaṇḍeśa, who did not refrain from cutting off his father's legs for having interfered with his worship of Śiva and bathed the liṅga with the milk of cows in his care). To the northeast is a beautiful large-sized panel, a masterpiece of Chola art, which shows Śiva bestowing his grace on Chaṇḍikeśvara.

THE CHOLA TEMPLES

The temple is 54.86 m high and in arrangement follows its Thaṅjāvūr predecessor. But while the latter is tall and stately, with its contour straight and severe, suggestive of strength, the present one is shorter and its contour more graceful and delicate and somewhat feminine in its lack of angularity.

The sculptures in the temple are less numerous than in the Thaṅjāvūr one but are of the same nature. Here again we have representations of princely warriors, with swords and shields. Lakshmī and Sarasvatī are shown seated in niches as at Thaṅjāvūr. In the northern and southern niches of the central shrine are Bhikshāṭana-mūrti and Chaṇḍeśānugraha-mūrti (pl. VII), the former disfigured with a plaster-coat. In the southern niches a figure, presumably that of Dakṣiṇāmūrti, is missing: the rest variously represent dancing Gaṇeśa, Ardhanārīśvara beside the bull, Hari-Hara and Naṭarāja (pl. VIII A) dancing along with Kālī and Bhṛīṅgi attended by gaṇas and Kāraikkālammaiṃ playing cymbals. On the sides of the niche Viṣṇu plays the drum, Gaṇeśa and Kārttikeya approach the scene on their vehicles, and Devī, with her arm resting on the bull beside her, watches the dance. To the west is Śiva as Gaṅgādhara appeasing Devī who is forlorn and sullen on account of her lord having received Gaṅgā on his matted locks. On the sides of the niches is narrated the story of Bhagīratha's penance to bring Gaṅgā down to the earth. Then there are Liṅgodbhava, Viṣṇu with his consorts and Kārttikeya or Indra and Śiva as Umā-sahita. On the walls of the niche with Umā-sahita, Viṣṇu is shown adoring him by offering his eye as a flower. The northern niches contain the figures of Kālāntaka with the story of Mārkaṇḍeya on the sides of the niche, eight-armed Mahishamardinī standing beside her lion, Brahmā with a beard, accompanied by his consorts Sāvitṛī and Sarasvatī (pl. IX A), Bhairava with eight arms, Śiva as Madanāntaka burning Manmatha (pl. VIII B), one of his hands in tarjanī (threatening) attitude, Manmatha and his consort Rati, the former first shooting with a bow and then helpless, and other gods intervening on his behalf. The lowest series of panels on the base of the temple shows seated lions with one of the paws raised and rearing in an attitude usually found in the Pallava temples of the time of Rājasimha (690-715) and with analogues at Prambanan in Indonesia.

The niches are arranged in the same fashion as at Thaṅjāvūr: there is a large central niche flanked on each side by two smaller ones, all projecting out of the main wall, with a kumbha-pañjara pattern between each pair of niches. Noteworthy are the roof-forms on the respective tiers, in the shape of śālā, koshṭha and kūḍu. In the eaves of the lowest niches are bracket-figures of the gaṇas of Śiva and rearing lions. The principal niche on each side is devoted to one or the other of the gods of the Trinity—Brahmā, Viṣṇu, and Śiva: Śiva Dakṣiṇā-mūrti on the south, Viṣṇu with consorts on the west and Brahmā with consorts on the north. The bays of the niches at every stage have rows of yāṭi as decoration, with makara-heads at the extreme ends from which warriors are issuing. The niche-tops are decorated in a circular fashion as in the Thaṅjāvūr temple.

The space on the temple-base below the yāṭi-frieze is covered with inscriptions, though not as completely as at Thaṅjāvūr. In the niches, numerous iconographic forms are repeated in a different order and with the addition of a few more, such as Varāha rescuing the Earth, space for the representations being made available by the utilization of the space for the kumbha-pañjaras in other niches in addition to the five main niches.

The shrine to the north of the main temple, dedicated to Chaṇḍikeśvara, contains a large fine carving representing the steward of Śiva's household. There are two other shrines, respectively to its north and south, contemporary with the main temple, on either side of the main shrine. There is no deity in the southern shrine, but in the shrine to the north is installed an image of Devi of a later date. That this shrine was also originally intended for Śiva is indicated by the bull guarding the door. A feature to be noted here is that the bull is quite different from those of Choḷa workmanship and resembles those of the earlier Chāḷukya period. The dvāra-pālas in the two shrines and the images in the niches, wherever they are extent, are contemporary with, but less carefully executed than those in the main temple.

To the south-west of the main temple is a small temple with a large image of Gaṇeśa, his trunk curling round the sweets (modaka), as is usual in some early Chola representations of the deity.

Beyond and to the north of the shrine of Chaṇḍikeśvara is another shrine, wherein is housed a fine early image of Mahishamardini. Further beyond is a large representation of lion in plastered brickwork, through the body of which runs a flight of steps leading into a large well, known as Simhakiṇar. The popular story goes that the Chola king got water from the Gaṅgā and poured it into this well, so that there could be a perpetual supply of it for the bath (abhisheka) of the deity.

Among the bronzes in the temple the following are specially noteworthy: a large Somāskanda, Bhogaśaktidevī, another Devī and Mahāsenā or Kārttikeya as war-god carrying a vajra, shield and cock (pl. IX B). The significance of the remarkable figure of the war-god to the ideal of the royal warrior Rājendra cannot be underestimated.

The unique slab with the nine planets (navagraha) (pl. X) in the large temple, hidden in total darkness, is an eloquent testimony to the cosmopolitan spirit of Rājendra, who, after his northern conquests, combined northern and southern elements to produce this most interesting group.

The most remarkable carving here, the Chaṇḍeśānugraha-mūrti panel, is almost a suggestion of the laurels won by Rājendra through the grace of Śiva, and he humbly presents himself as a devotee of the Lord, who blessed Chaṇḍeśa.

AIRĀVATEŚVARA TEMPLE, DĀRĀSURAM

As one enters the Airāvateśvara temple at Dārāsura (pl. XI), one finds a large gopura, the upper portion of which is completely lost but the form of which may be imagined from the complete second (inner) gopura. The larger prākāra-wall all around the temple, decorated with couchant bulls at intervals, is in continuation of the second gopura. Supporting the gopura are pillars in a row, which have some fine carvings of lovely apsarases, Śiva-gaṇas and other motifs. Beyond the gopura is a large balipīṭha with beautiful lotus-petal decorations. Towards one side of it, just behind the large Nandi, is a quaint standing dwarf Śiva-gaṇa blowing a conch, which, together with the bull, is a fine artistic product. Long narrow strips of frieze, with a whole series of miniature figures dancing in lovely poses with musical accompaniment, provide, even as one enters, the key-note of the decoration in this temple nitya-vinoda, perpetual entertainment.

On either side at the entrance are small balustrades, intended to flank steps (now missing), with beautiful makara-decoration on their outer side. The makara with a floriated tail, short legs and curled-up snout and a pair of dwarf gaṇa-riders on it forms a lovely decoration. At the entrance the visitor is greeted by a beautiful maṇḍapa with a number of pillars, to be approached through an extension of it towards the south, with flights of steps on the east and west. The balustrades for these steps are nicely decorated on the outer side with a long curling

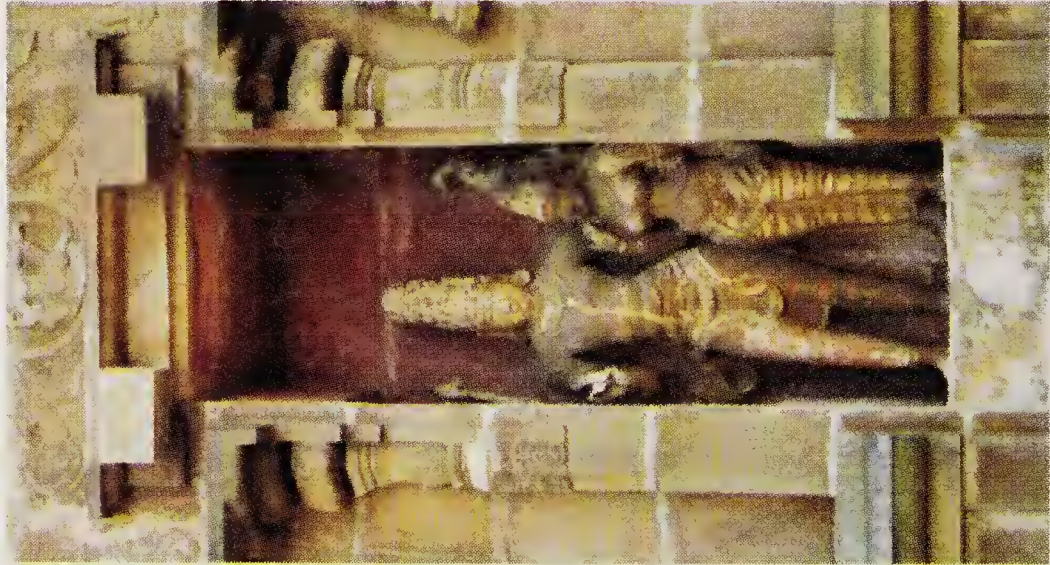

Brihadishvara temple, Thanjavūr. See p. 14

PLATE II

A

B

C

Bṛihadīśvara temple, Thaṇjāvūr : A, Bhikshāṭana-mūrti; B, Ālīṅga-Chandraśekhara-mūrti; C, dvāra-pāla. See pp. 16 and 17

Bṛihadiśvara temple, Thaṇjāvūr : Kālāntaka. See p. 16

PLATE IV

Brihadīśvara temple, Thaṇjavūr : musicians (painting). See p. 19

Bṛhadiśvara temple, Thaṇjavūr : Rājarāja and his guru (painting). See p. 19

PLATE VI

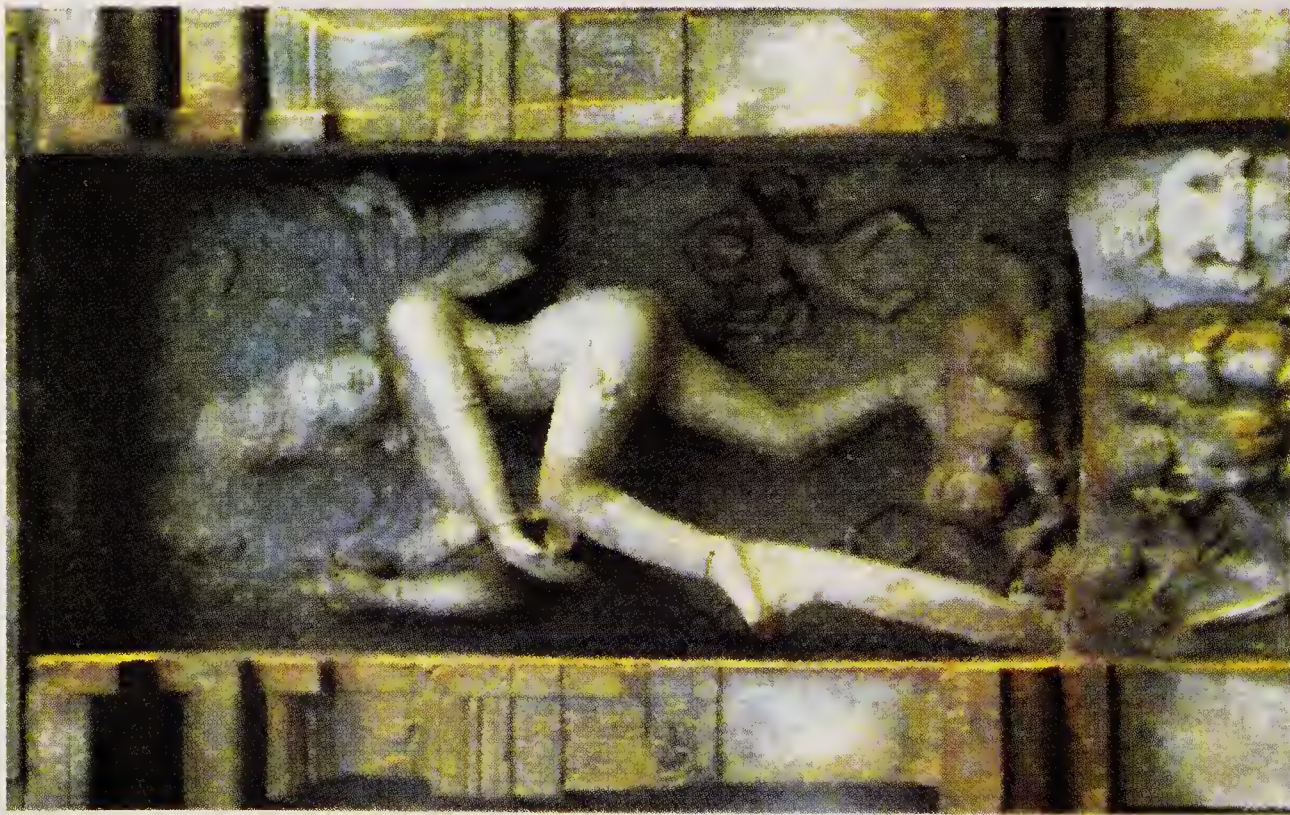

Bṛihadiśvara temple, Gaṅgaikoṇḍacholapuram. See p. 22

*Bṛihadiśvara temple, Gaṅgaikoṇḍacholapuram : Chaṇḍeśānugraha-mūrti.
See p. 24*

PLATE VIII

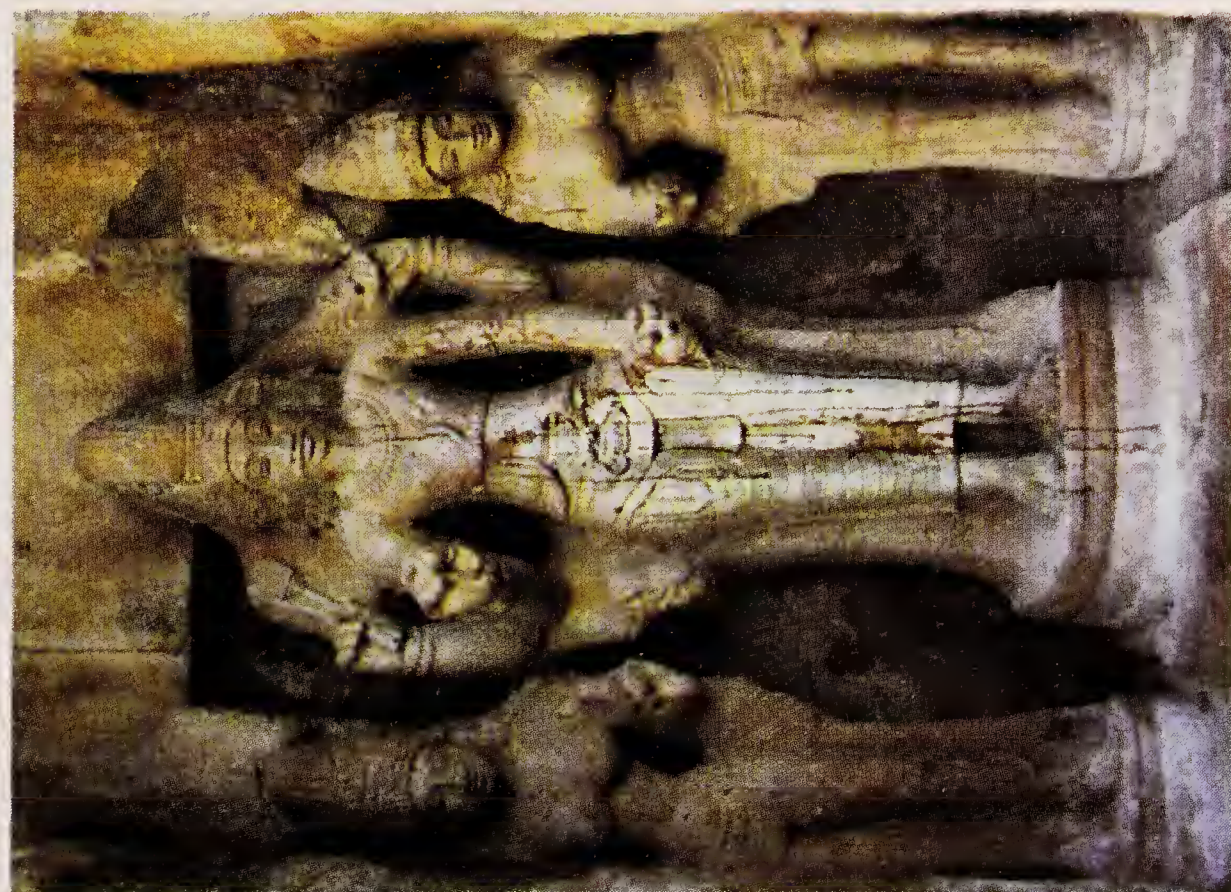

A

B

Bṛihadīśvara temple, Gaṅgaikondacholapuram : A, Natarāja; B, Śiva burning Mannatha. See pp. 24 and 25

A.

B.

Bṛhadiśvara temple, Gaṅgaikondacholapuram : A, Brahmā; B, Kārttikeya. See pp. 25 and 27

PLATE X

Bṛihadīśvara temple, Gaṅgaikondacholapuram : navagrahas. See p. 27

Airāvateśvara temple, Dārāsuram. See p. 28

PLATE XII

Airāvatesvara temple, Dārāsura : mandapa. See p. 36

A.

B.

*Airāvatesvara temple, Dārāsaram : A, female chauri-bearer; B, Kaikālamūrti.
See pp. 31 and 36*

PLATE XIV

Airāvateśvara temple, Dārāsuram : wives of ṛishis. See p. 36 trunk issuing out a lion-head; a similar second one runs parallel to the trunk of an elephant, lost in the open jaws of a makara whose floriated tail is curled up, to balance the complete design. The elephant is beautifully decorated and has on its back dwarf gaṇas viz., the śaṅkha- and padmanidhis. The eight outer pillars of the maṇḍapa are supported by squatting yālīs with their trunks curled up and with pronounced abaci. The lotus-petal decoration below has prominent petal-tips. The capital, as in the other pillars in the maṇḍapa, has the beginning of the bodhika-decoration, which, in the late Chola and Vijayanagara periods, develops into the lotus-decoration. Each of the four inner pillars is divided into sections, three oblong and two polygonal. The decoration which later develops into the nāga-bandha is just present, and, as in other early Chola structures, is only a decorative pattern of the double-geese. The rectangular portions of the pillars are decorated with small panels illustrating mythological stories, such as the attack of Manmatha, the penance of Pārvatī, the prayer of the gods for a son of Śiva, the birth of Kumāra, Śiva's marriage, his fight with the asuras, etc. On four pillars which lead on to the extension of the maṇḍapa, short inscriptions are repeated, describing it as svastī śrī-Rāja-gambhīram tiru-maṇḍapam. If the elephants on the sides of the balustrades of the steps mentioned above are lovely specimens, there are equally lovely galloping horses, one on either side of the maṇḍapa-extension immediately beside the flight of steps, with a huge wheel carved behind it, which gives the maṇḍapa the semblance of a chariot. The front of the base of this maṇḍapa-extension is decorated at the bottom with panels showing: Śiva fighting the Tripuras from the chariot and as Kālāntaka repelling Yama for protecting the son of Mṛikaṇḍu whom he had blessed with a long life; Śiva burning Kāma who dared attack him with his flowery bow and arrow even while his lovely queens, including Rati, and other gods pray for his being spared; and the destruction of Daksha's sacrifice by Vīrabhadra. Above this, in five niches at intervals, are Agni, Indra, Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Vāyu, all standing with hands in the attitude of reverence to Śiva. It may be noted that the original plan of the flight of steps east of the maṇḍapa has been completely spoilt by later renovations, and the symmetry, which no doubt originally existed, is now lost.

The main maṇḍapa is in continuation of the mukha-maṇḍapa of the main shrine and is covered completely on the northern side at the extreme ends of the eastern and southern sides, providing on the outer face of the wall as in other portions of the temple, the usual pattern of niches with pilasters in between. The same pattern of alternating niche and pilaster with a main niche for every pair of subsidiary niches is found on the outer walls of the second maṇḍapa, which is a completely closed one, all the pillars being inside. The main maṇḍapa is decorated with a pair of dwarf yakshas guarding padma- and śaṅkha-nidhis in niches on either side on the east. These figures, like all the other special forms of deities in the niches, are of fine-grained black basalt, distinguished from the granite used in the entire structure. The pillars of the first (main) maṇḍapa contain beautiful patterns of decorative creepers so arranged that in the circular medallions created therein are figures dancing in diverse poses, musicians and sometimes forms of deities such as Gaṅgādhara and Tripurāntaka. These figures adorn panels arranged in tiers of niches and śālās on the sides of other pillars. Even where the pillars have purely decorative patterns, there are figures, mostly in dance-poses or playing musical instruments, introduced very deftly into them.

The ceiling shows square and rectangular patterns, bands of which are all filled with decorative designs. Almost all the central medallions contain similar dance and musical groups. The pillar-capitals here have the precursor of the bodhika-type, the ornamental precursor of the nāga-bandha being also present.

As we enter the next maṇḍapa, which leads on to the ardha-maṇḍapa and the main shrine, there are in niches Devī with lotus, and ratna-kalaśa (pot filled with gems) and Nandikeśvara standing with hands in adoration on one side and saint Kaṇṇappa and seated Sarasvatī on the other. It should be noted that the openings of the main maṇḍapa have been bricked up here and there in modern times for converting portions into rooms and the centre of the northern side has been improvised into a cell for Devī; the chaurī-holding dvāra-pālikās (pl. XIII A), fixed on either side of the doorway, also improvised, are lovely and belong to the same period as the other fine sculptures arranged in the niches of the main temple itself. The pillars in the maṇḍapa adjoining the main one, which leads on to the main shrine, are somewhat simpler, notwithstanding their being polygonal and with flower-petal decoration at intervals and corbels, which recall the Chālukya type.

THE CHOĻA TEMPLES

The mukha-maṇḍapa, approached by long flights of steps from the north and south, marks the end of the maṇḍapas and the beginning of the main shrine. Here there is a couchant Nandi smaller than the one at the start of the main maṇḍapa. The dvāra-pālas of the main shrine are depicted as furious and with huge clubs; they have four hands in the threatening attitude (tarjanī), bear tusks and carry triśūla on their bound-up hair decorated with the lion-head design. The garland-decoration of their yajñopavīta again recalls Chālukya influence.

A six-headed Kumāra standing to the left of the entrance of the main cell is a fine sculpture.

The walls of the maṇḍapa and the main shrine contain niches, some of which still possess exquisite specimens of early Choḷa sculpture; the other niches either have no image or have poor modern substitutes in brick-and-plaster. Of the noteworthy Choḷa specimens are: a fine Ardhanārīśvara, unique of its kind, with three faces and eight arms; a four-armed Nāgarāja having snake-hoods over his head and hands joined in adoration; Agastya, the dwarf sage, seated with one of his hands in the teaching attitude and the other carrying a water-vessel; another seated sage carrying the rosary and manuscript; dancing Mārtaṇḍa-Bhairava or Aghora-Vīrabhadra with four hands, three heads and a terrible countenance; Śiva as Śarabha destroying Nara-simha (in a niche to which a small maṇḍapa, reached by a flight of steps, is provided); standing Gaṇeśa; Dakṣiṇā-mūrti attended by sages seated under a banyan-tree and expounding the highest truth; Liṅgodbhava

Śiva, issuing from a flaming pillar, Brahmā and Viṣṇu unable to reach the top and bottom, adoring the liṅga; Brahmā; eight-armed Durgā on the severed head of buffalo; seated Devī as Bhuvaneśvarī carrying pāśa and aṅkuśa, in two of her hands, the other two being in abhaya and varada; Śiva as Tripurāntaka, carrying the axe, deer, bow and arrow; multi-armed Gajāntaka destroying a demon in the guise of an elephant and dancing against the spread-out hide of the animal in the bhujanga-trāsita pose, Devī shrinking away from him in fear; Bhairava with six arms standing with his dog behind him; a sage carrying a water-vessel and teaching two disciples; and Maheśa-mūrti seated with three heads and four arms carrying the spear, axe, rosary and water-vessel. All these sculptures, made of polished black basalt, are of exquisite workmanship.

In describing the sides of the main shrine, it should be mentioned that the lower half of the base is of the same type all over including the maṇḍapas. The lowest series of panels above the lotus-petal decoration is divided by decorative bands and in them are yālīs, couchant or rearing, in pairs or single, women dancing to the accompaniment of music, dwarf gaṇas in queer poses, dancing, playing a drum, blowing a conch, carrying the chauri or holding their hands in wonder, often in the company of a bull. Above this is a long yālī-frieze, which is again repeated a little below the niches. There are miniature decorative carvings a little below the second row of yālīs, above it and immediately below the niches. In the main shrine the carving below the niche depicts scenes illustrating stories of Śaivite saints, some of which have labels in Tamil.¹ Separating these scenes there are miniature carvings of dancing figures and Śiva or Devī in different attitudes.

On the outer walls, on either side of the niches, are also carved fine figures corresponding to those enshrined in the niches, simulating the tradition of the earlier temples at Thāñjāvūr and Gaṅgaikoṇḍacholapuram. Thus, Gaṇeśa's niche is flanked by bhūtagaṇas, dwarf attendants, carrying offerings with the deity's vehicle, the mouse; the niche of Dakṣiṇā-mūrti is flanked by exquisitely-carved figures of ṛishis, which are, however, hidden by a later brick structure. The niches of the main temple are three in number. The central one, larger than the flanking ones, has a double-pillar decoration on its either side. It has a top fashioned as a śālā, while the tops of the niches on either side illustrate the koshṭha-pattern. The double-pillar decorations between these have the lion-headed kūḍu for their top. Between the niches and the double-pillar decorations, all of which project forward, there are kumbha-pañjara decorations against the main wall itself. Above the niches, near the caves, there is a whole row of dwarf gaṇas, dancing, playing musical instruments or otherwise merry. Against the roof here and there are kūḍus. Gaping bhūta-heads serve as gargoyles for discharging water from the roof. The kūḍu-, pavillion- and śālā-patterns are repeated in the different tiers of the vimāna.

All around the main shrine is a broad strip, 3·66 m wide, paved with granite slabs, and a low wall, 25·40 cm high, of the same material, the latter beautifully carved with the lotus-pattern and Nandis seated in between. This beautiful row of Nandis is unfortunately mutilated everywhere. The existence of outlets for water at intervals shows that it was intended to be a sort of a pleasant water-receptacle to give the idea of a pool surrounding the temple in spring and keep the atmosphere cool in summer. A number of circular rings with low rims, carved out of stone, appear to have been lamps.

¹See Appendix, p. 40.

The gargoyle for discharging water from the main cell is on the north. It is long, has a dip and double course, is decorated with two lion-head motifs, one at the source and the other where it starts the lower course at the point of the dip, and discharges water into a large well-carved water-reservoir with the figures of dancing gaṇas on the sides. The gomukha is supported at the base by a caryatid dwarf gaṇa, as in the gargoyle in the temple at Thaṇjāvūr (though the figure here is standing), by a rearing yāḷi and again by triple gaṇas at the end.

In the vicinity of the main temple near this gargoyle is the shrine of Chaṇḍikeśvara, similar to the one at Thaṇjāvūr.

The inner side of the entire prākāra, surrounding the large paved courtyard, has a beautiful series of maṇḍapa-decoration, which, in the main, is one long row of pillar-cloister with cells at intervals for deities, some of which have disappeared. At the four corners the cloister has been enlarged and embellished into maṇḍapas, approached by steps decorated with balustrades, showing interesting motifs as a ferocious lion pouncing on an elephant with curled-up trunk lost in the mouth of a makara and with its sides covered up at the points where a niche or trellis-window is added as decoration (pl. XII). The base, as usual, has fine panels showing scenes of dance, jugglery tricks, themes of sculptural pun and so forth. All these points are best observed in the maṇḍapa towards the north-west. Towards the north-west there is a similar maṇḍapa, but lacking the trellis-work. Here the pillars are well-decorated with dance-figures; the ceiling also is profusely covered with beautiful panels and medallions filed with danseuses and musical figures.

The top of this maṇḍapa is decorated with śālā-roof suggesting Naṭarāja's sabhā; this is the nāṭya-maṇḍapa of the temple—a fact clearly borne out by not only the sculptures on the pillars and ceiling but also by a carving on the base of Viṣṇu playing the drum in front of the maṇḍapa. Though now in a bad state of preservation, this must have been the place where originally the Naṭarāja bronze should have been housed. To the east, beyond this, is the yāga-śālā, and further on is the representation of a king and queen, in addition to figures of deities. The two portrait-statues are probably intended to represent either Vīrarājendra or Rājarāja II, either of whom was responsible for this temple, and his queen.

In the cloistered hall to the west of the nāṭya-maṇḍapa there is a remarkable group of large carvings in the round, representing Śiva as Kaṅkāla-mūrti (pl. XIII B), a number of ṛishi-patnīs, the wives of sages of Dārukāvana who attended on Śiva and were astonished at his beauty. The garments of one of the women in a pair (pl. XIV) are slipping off and the other has a finger on her lips indicative of wonder, Gaṇa-dwarfs are playing the drum or sounding a gong in quaint and picturesque attitudes. Kaṅkāla-mūrti himself is calm and serene and fondles a deer with one of his hands, while a dwarf-attendant carries his begging bowl. Of the women, some carry ladles for offering food to the divine begger. The composition is one of the great masterpieces of Chola art. There are also carvings of Manmatha and Rati on a chariot and Kaṇṇappa-nayanār, the saintly hunter.

DĀRĀSURAM

Beyond this are one hundred and eight Śivāchāryas (Śaiva saints) in a row fixed in the wall, with their names and short descriptions incised below each. To the south a large portion of the pillared cloister has tumbled down.

In the roof of the niches, all along the wall of the maṇḍapa to the north, there are representations of ṛishis, which, together with similar figures in the niches, point to the element of peace and tranquillity, as opposed to the heroic element which is the key-note of sculpture in the temples at Thaṅjāvūr and Gaṅgaikoṇḍacholapuram. The long series of stories from the Śiva-purāṇa and Śiva devotees portrayed here also suggest the same. When we remember that this was the period when the stories of the Śaiva kings and the sacred Devāram hymns were collected together, we can understand the purpose of this. It is not unlikely that the name Dārāsuraṁ has something to do with Dārukā-vana, especially when we consider the magnificent group of sculptures representing Kaṅkāla and the ṛishi-patnīs described above.

The liṅga of the temple is known as Rājarājeśvaram-uḍayār, and the story goes that the temple was erected by Rājarāja himself to satisfy a cowherdess who made a gift of the huge stone used as the śikhara of the large temple at Thaṅjāvūr in accordance with her wishes that there should be a temple in her village.

THE CHOĻA TEMPLES

Adjacent to this is the shrine of Devī, which is contemporary with the main temple. The balustrade-decoration of yālīs with riders on either side as we enter the shrine are fine works of art. Some lattice-window carvings are also worthy of note. The gargoyle, which presents a dwarf gaṇa in quaint pose both to receive and disgorge the water from the cell, is interesting even in its mutilated state. The niches of the outer walls of the shrine contain forms of Devī. The tiny dance-figures in the lattice-windows and the nāga-decoration are remarkable.

The profuse occurrence of dance and musical scenes and of figures in various dance-poses cannot but attract the attention of the visitor. The Choḷa period was one of great patronage and encouragement for dance and music, and when we remember that the gopuras at Chidambaram, of slightly later date, have a number of dance-figures to illustrate the various sthānas and karaṇas of Bharata's Nāṭya-śāstra, we can understand the reason for this exuberance of nāṭya-figures in the embellishment of the temple.

The narration of stories of the Śaiva saints, with depictions of temples, ponds or rivers full of fish, shells and other aquatic animals and, in one case, a crocodile, along with the frequent figures of kings with royal paraphernalia, such as peacock-feather parasol, sages and Brāhmaṇas with umbrellas in their hands and similar themes strongly recall the corresponding scenes of an earlier date at Borobudur and Prambanan in Indonesia. In fact, even the lions in the lowermost panels of the base of the main shrine remind us strongly of their counterparts at Prambanan. This is not at all surprising, as the intercourse between the Eastern Archipelago and India was considerable in the Chōḷa period, most of these islands being under Chōḷa sway for at least some time. The decorative elements, specially the creeper-patterns providing medallions for dance-figures on the pillars and some of the pillar-capitals recall their Rāshtrakūṭa and Chālukya counterparts. This is easily accounted for by the constant Chōḷa, Rāshtrakūṭa and Chālukya inroads into the territories of one another. A dvāra-pāla figure, which was originally in the Dārāsuraṃ temple but has now been removed to the Thaṅjāvūr temple, is of Chālukya workmanship and contains an inscription on its pedestal in early Chōḷa letters, mentioning that it was brought by the Chōḷa king as a war-trophy after the sack of Kalyāṇapura, the capital of the Western Chālukyas.

DĀRĀSURAM

APPENDIX

STORIES OF ŚAIVA SAINTS DEPICTED AT DĀRĀSURAM¹

The series of stories illustrated in miniature panels as the top line of the base of the vimāna and the maṇḍapa in the Dārāsuram temple is full of narrative interest. Most of them are explained by means of labels incised in characters of the period.

The story of Appar, the great saint who converted Mahendrarvarman Pallava and who is always represented with a spud held by his hand against his shoulder, is graphically depicted in a number of scenes.

Then there is the story of Tirumūlar bathing with his wife in the tank beside the temple. This is followed by the story of a saint, who was fond of feeding Śaiva devotees and whom Śiva, in the guise of a Brāhmaṇa, once tested by demanding food at midnight, which he supplied. The label for this runs Iḷaiyamāraṅgudi Mārar kadai.

The next panel illustrates a lion-clad saint carrying a rod in his hand and standing before a scale, in which on one side there are two figures of a man and woman in adoration, and Śiva and Pārvatī on Nandi grant them darśana.

There is a scene of a king offering his sword to a young lion-clad Śaiva saint carrying a staff.

The devotion of Kaṇṇappanayanār is illustrated by representing him as plucking his eye with an arrow and offering it.

Mārkaṇḍeya appears next with the noose of Yama surrounding not only the neck of the adoring saint but also the liṅga itself.

Beyond it is the story of a woman with her hair being cut off, as a saint watches this and Śiva appears with his consort on his bull high up in the sky.

This is followed by the representation of the legend of a saint playing the flute in a forest surrounded by cows and close to an elephant when Śiva and Pārvatī on bull visit him.

¹See p. 34.

STORIES OF ŚAIVA SAINTS

The next scene presents a devotee carefully preparing a garland and adoring with it Śiva seated in front of a temple with a rosary in his hand.

Then comes the legend of Nanda, the great saint, who bathed in the tank and entered the fire to have access into the portals of the Chidambaram temple and Śiva and Pārvatī on bull grant him darśana. This is labelled Tirunāḷai-povār kadai.

This followed by the story of Tirukkuripputondar, the saintly washerman of Kāñchī, whose sincerity was tested by Śiva, who is here shown as an old Brāhmaṇa with a staff in his hand demanding his clothes that could not be washed by that evening owing to a storm.

Scenes from the life of Chaṇḍeśa are now shown. The boy-saint is bathing a liṅga under a tree with the milk of his cows: on this father angrily interrupting, Chaṇḍeśa, not brooking interference, cuts off his legs with an axe. For this he is rewarded by Śaiva by winding a garland on his head. Chaṇḍeśa is shown reverently seated at the foot of seated Śiva and Pārvatī, while he is adorned with the garland. The inscription here reads Śaynallūrpiḷḷaiyār kadai.

Next is the story of the boy-saint Tirujñānasambanda, who overcame the Jainas, all shown impaled, by performing the miracle of floating a manuscript against the current of the stream. The saint is depicted as a very small boy with cymbals in his hand and as adored by a devotee from behind. Three nude Jainas, with flowers and other objects in their hands, are shown standing, probably to throw them into the stream and perform a miracle. The king is in the centre of the panel and beyond him are impaled the defeated Jainas.

Another carving shows a devotee, who, failing to secure ghee for lighting lamps as directed by an aerial voice from the Śiva temple at Tiruvālūr (indicated by a bull at the top) is shown filling a vessel with water from a lotus-pond full of fish and birds. The clear inscription here reads Naminandi aḍigal.

Then there is the story of the boy-saint Sambanda, described as Āḷuḍaiya-piḷḷaiyār in the inscription. The father is questioning the boy, who points to Śiva and Pārvatī on Nandi and explains that he was fed by them with divine milk.

THE CHOLA TEMPLES

Beyond it is the legend of the warrior Kalikkāmānāyanār, dying on his bed rather than getting cured of paralysis by Sundaramūrti, who, in turn, attempts to commit suicide rather than return without curing him. Finally the one is brought to life and the other prevented from killing himself. The inscription here runs eyarkon Kalikkāmāṇḍār.

Two priests are now presented, homa-fire between them, with a label painted Somāsimāranār.

A saint adoring Śiva with a garland is shown next with the label Śakkiyanār. This is the story of a Jaina who took of Śiva worship and was so lost in it that he did not know even when he used bricks instead of flowers.

This is followed by the legend of a great Śaiva devotee, who offered his son's flesh to his guest who was no other than Śiva in disguise and demanded this ghastly food. When, however, it was cooked, the guest refused to take food in the house of the childless couple but finally appeared before them and restored to life the child, whom the mother received with joy. The label here is Śiruttonḍar kadai.

Next we have Śeramān, the Chera king, going to Kailāsa on an elephant. The label for it runs Śeramānperumāḷ kadai.

Beyond this is a scene showing a number of scholars and a king. The inscription is in two strips, Poyyaḍimaiyillāda pulavar and Kurruvanār, who were all Śaiva saints.

The next is a story which is described in the inscription as Pugalcholanār. Here the saintly Chola king is so filled with sorrow at the sight of a head of a devotee of Śiva in the midst of a number of heads piled in front of him by his victorious commander that, to expiate the sin, he took this enemy's head on his own and entered the fire when Śiva and Pārvati appeared on Nandi to bless him.

Beyond this is a scene from the life of a king who was fond of rewarding Śaiva saints whether they were sincere or not. He is shown in the company of six paṇḍāram saints. The label for this reads Narasingamuṇaiyaraiyar.

The story narrated next is that of Ādipattan, a fisherman, who used to offer the best fish from his daily catch to Śiva at Nāga-paṭṭiṇam. When one day he caught only one fish he willingly offered even that to the god, who immediately appeared before him with his consort on his bull and blessed him. The inscription reads Adibattar-kadai.

STORIES OF ŚAIVA SAINTS

Then is the story of a devotee, who was in the habit of feeding Śaiva devotees and who cut off the hands of his wife since she hesitated to welcome and wash the feet of their old servant now turned a recluse, standing at their door as the guest. He is consequently graced by the darśana of Śiva and Pārvatī on bull. The inscription here reads Kalikkambāṇḍār kaḍai.

A saint is now shown as driving a pair of bulls for pressing oil, which is taken by him to the Śiva temple beyond the river. One day he failed to get the required oil, so that, to feed the lamps with his own blood, he tried to cut his head, but Śiva appeared and blessed him. The fragmentary inscription here is Kaliyanār.

The next story, as the inscription shows, is of Śattiyāṇḍār, a devotee of Śiva, who used to cut off the tongue of those who spoke ill of Śaiva devotees.

A Pallava king who abandoned royal glory for serving the god is now shown four times adoring temples at different places. The inscription here reads Aiyyaḍigal Kāḍavarkonār.

This is followed by a scene illustrating the story of the saint who regularly used to light lamps in temples, and once failing to obtain money by selling grass for purchasing ghee for the lamps, first lit the grass itself and later his own locks of hair. The devotee is Kaṇampulāṇḍār, as the inscription states.

The next carving is of the famous author of Tirukkovai, who spent all his wealth in renovating temples and finally reached mount Kailāsa. The inscription reads Kāriyār.

The next scene shows the conversion of the Pāṇḍyan king Neḍumāran through his queen and minister. The inscription here reads Neḍumāranār.

Beyond this is portrayed a sage seated with a rosary in his hand. The inscription names him Vāyilār.

Another scene shows a king cutting off the hands of his queen with a sword. It illustrates the story of a Pallava king who mutilated his queen for having inadvertently smelt a flower intended for the deity. She had already had her nose cut off by a saint named Śeruttunai for the same offence. The inscription for this reads Kalanchingaṇār.

THE CHOLA TEMPLES

The incident of the queen's nose being cut by Śeruttunai is given in the adjacent panel. The inscription here reads Śeruttunaiyāṇḍār.

Beyond this is illustrated the story of the saintly priest of the temple at Śrīvilliputtūr, who steadfastly worshipped Śiva even in the days of a great famine. When he once dropped his water-pot on a liṅga on account of his extreme infirmity, the god appeared and directed him to seek and find a coin daily near the bali-piṭha, so that he could sustain himself. The inscription here reads Pugaḷttunaiyar.

The next is a scene of a warrior killing a child with his sword, while some women shout in fear and crouch away from him. He then adores Śiva on Nandi with Pārvatī. It illustrates the story of the commander of a Choḷa king who killed all his men, including even babies, for having consumed paddy intended for Śiva during a famine when he was away in the battlefield. The inscription here reads Koḷpuliyaṇḍār.

The next scene is of saint adoring a number of other saints—an act which is as meritorious as adoring Śiva himself. The inscription reads Battarāippanivār.

The following scene shows, devotees singing and sounding cymbals in front of a Śiva temple. The label reads Paramanaiye pāḍuvār, meaning that their songs of praise are only for Śiva.

In the same train of thought is a scene showing a saint in contemplation, seated in the vicinity of a temple whence the deity is taken out in procession to the accompaniment of music and dance outside the temple near the bali-piṭha and Nandi.

The next scene shows saints adoring Śiva at Tiruvārūr. The inscription reads Tiruvārūrpīrandār, meaning that everyone born in the holy spot of Tiruvārūr is saintly enough to be adored.

Beyond this a saint is worshipping liṅga; there is a bell hanging from above and below there is a conch on a tripod, reminding us of similar objects portrayed in Javanese sculpture. This, with its inscription Mukhālam tirumeni tiṇḍuvār, glorifies the greatness of those who worship Śiva thrice a day.

STORIES OF ŚAIVA SAINTS

Another panel depicts the story of the Pāṇḍya king and his queen Maṅgayarkaraśi, who, with the help of the boy-saint Sambanda, converted her husband to Śaivism. The inscription reads Pāṇḍimādevi...

Then there is the story of the weaver-saint Neśāṇḍar, who always gave away the products of his loom to Śaiva devotees. This is indicated by the respective inscription.

A beautiful sculpture beyond this shows a king adoring a temple: this is a portrait of one of the Chola monarchs who was ranked among the saints for his devotion. The inscription reads Ko Śiṅgapperumāl.

The scene that comes next illustrates the story of a devotee and his wife who played musical instruments and sang near the temple of Śiva at Madurai. In the hand of the saint is an early type of viṇā (interesting for the study of ancient musical instruments), and his wife plays on cymbals. The inscription reads Tirunilakaṇṭapperumbāṇanār.

Beyond this can be recognized with the help of the inscriptions Śaḍaiyanār and Isaiñāniyar, the father and mother of Sundara, whose story is illustrated in the succeeding panels.

An old Brāhmaṇa with a manuscript and umbrella in his hand talking to a princely youth, with the inscription reading Āvana-olai-kāṭṭinapaḍi, illustrates the incident of Śiva coming disguised as a Brāhmaṇa to fetch Sundara-mūrti on the day of his marriage to his temple at Tiruveṇṇainallūr by presenting a document in proof of his claim over Sundara's person as also earlier over those of his father and grandfather.

The scene that follows shows some Śaiva saints and a youth sounding cymbals in front of a temple. This illustrates the beginning of Sundara's career as a composer of hymns. The inscription reads Uḍaiyanambiyai āṇḍukoṇḍaruḷiyapaḍi.

After this a princely youth, evidently Sundara, is shown leading a king beside a temple and directing him to cross a river to reach another temple of Śiva beyond it. The inscription here reads Uḍaiyanambikku ollenrarūḷinapaḍi.

THE CHOLA TEMPLES

The next scene shows Sundara, almost princely in appearance with peacock-feather umbrella carried by one of his attendants, waylaid by dacoits and robbed of the wealth he got from the Chera king. The inscription here runs Uḍayanambiyai veḍar vaḷipparittaviḍam.

Further up is a scene showing Sundara sounding cymbals in the vicinity of a temple where a number of bags are piled before him. This illustrates how the thieves restored the wealth robbed from Sundara at the command of the god at Tirumuruganpūṇḍi. The inscription reads Tirumuruganpūṇḍiyil peṇṇapaḍi.

Beyond this is the last scene which shows a woman receiving her child from the jaws of a crocodile in a tank adjoining a temple. The princely figure here is saint Sundara with his hands in adoration. The scene illustrates the story of how, by singing a hymn, Sundara caused a crocodile to disgorge the child it had swallowed near the temple at Avināśi. The inscription reads Avināsiyāṇḍār mudalaivāipillai.

GLOSSARY

- ābhaṅga*, slight flexion (in the standing pose of a figure).
ālīḍha, the pose of a warrior with his right leg bent forward.
ardha-maṇḍapa, 'half hall', the smaller hall connecting the shrine and the larger pillared hall (maṇḍapa).
bali-pīṭha, altar for the placing of offerings.
bhujāṅga-trāsita, 'scared by snake', a dance-pose suggesting movement away from a snake out of fear.
bodhika, a corbel surmounting the capital of a pillar like the pushpa-bodhika, 'corbel of flower-pattern'.
chatura, a dance-pose, with the left foot slightly raised but still touching the ground.
gaṇa, a dwarf follower of Śiva.
gopura, the imposing temple-gateway.
kañchuki, 'shirt-wearer', a chamberlain in the royal harem.
koshṭha, a cell or niche.
koshṭha-pañjara, a niche decorated with curved cage-motif (cf. kumbha-pañjara).
kūḍu, the arched-window motif on roof-line with shovel- or lion-head top.
kumbha-pañjara, a vase with foliage crowned by curved cage-like pattern, a motif alternating with koshṭha-pañjara niches.
mahārājāḷilā, a royal pose of sitting at ease.
makara, the motif of a crocodile with floriated tail.
maṇḍapa, the pillared and canopied hall.
mukha-maṇḍapa, the narrow hall connecting the ardha-maṇḍapa or the maṇḍapa with the shrine.
nāga-bandha, a pillar-decoration simulating the hood of a snake.
padmāsana, a seated pose of ease with the legs crossed and soles turned up.
pañjara, 'nest', a cage-like decorative motif for a niche or base.
paryāṅka-bandha, legs, bound in a strap for being easily kept in a yogic pose of meditation (cf. yoga-paṭṭa).
śālā, a hut-shaped barrel-roofed pavilion.
tri-bhaṅga, triflex (in the standing pose of a figure).
vimāna, the elevation of the shrine with the superstructure.
yālī, leograph.
yoga-paṭṭa a band-strip for binding the legs in a pose of meditation (cf. paryāṅka-bandha).

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Annual Report of South Indian Epigraphy* (Madras, 1887-1940).
- A.K. Coomaraswamy, History of Indian and Indonesian Art (London, 1927).
- B. Dagens, Mayamata – Treatise of Housing, Architecture and Iconography, Indira Gandhi National Centre for the Arts (New Delhi, 1994).
- B. Venkataraman, Temple Art under the Chola Queens (Chennai, 1976).
- C. Sivaramamurti, 'The frescoes of the Colas', Triveni (Madras, 1934).
- C. Sivaramamurti, Royal Conquests and Cultural Migrations in South India and the Deccan (Calcutta, 1955).
- C. Sivaramamurti, The Chola Temples, Thanjavur, Gangaikonda-Cholapuram and Darasuram, Archaeological Survey of India (New Delhi, 1960).
- C. Sivaramamurti, The Chola Temples, Archaeological Survey of India (New Delhi, 1978).
- C.V. Naṛayana Aiyar, Origin and Early History of Saivism in South India, Madras Univ. Hist. Series, 2 vols (Madras, 1935 and 1937).
- D. Barret, Early Chola Art and Sculpture (Londres, 1974).
- D. Dayalan, Excavations at Darasuram, Punjab University Bulletin, Vol. 21, no. II (1990).
- F.R. Hemingway, Trichinopoly (Madras, 1907).
- F.R. Hemingway, Tanjore (Madras, 1915).
- F. Kingsbury and G. E. Philips, Hymns of the Tamil Saivite Saints, Heritage of India Series (Calcutta, 1921).
- G. Jouveau-Dubreuil, Archaeologie du sud de l' Inde, 2 pts. (Paris, 1914).
- G. Jouveau-Dubreuil, Dravidian Architecture, tr. V.S. Swaminatha Dikshitar (Pondicherry, 1920).
- J.M. Somasundaram Pallai, The Great Temple of Tanjore (Madras, 1935).
- K.A. Nilkanta Sastri, The Colas, Madras, Univ. Hist. Series, 2 vols (Madras, 1935 and 1937).
- K.A. Nilkanta Sastri, A History of South India, from Prehistoric Times to the fall of Vijayanagar (Madras, 1955).

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

- K. Krishna Sastrigal (ed.), Siva-bhakti-vilas of Upmanyu Maharshi (Madras, 1931).
- K.R. Srinivasan, Temples of South India (New Delhi, 1971).
- K.V. Soundara Rajan, Indian Temple Style (New Delhi, 1970).
- K.V. Soundara Rajan, The Art of South India, Tamil Nadu and Kerala (New Delh, 1978).
- K.V. Subrahmanya Aiyar, Historical Sketches of Ancient Deccan (Madras, 1917).
- M. Meister-M.A. Dhaky, Encylclopadedia of Indian Temple Architecture, South India, Lower Dravidadesa, 200 BC-AD 1324, American Institute of Indian Studies (New Delhi, 1983)
- M. Meister-M.A. Dhaky, Encylclopadedia of Indian Temple Architecture, South India, Upper Dravidadesa, Early Phase, AD 550-1075, American Institute of Indian Studies (New Delhi, 1986).
- O.C. Gangoly, South Indian Bronzes (Calcutta, 1978).
- P. Pichard, The Monument and the Living Presence, Tanjavur Brhadisvara, An Architectural Study, Indira Gandhi National Centre for the Arts (New Delhi, 1995).
- R. Nagaswamy, Gangaikondacholapuram, State Department of Archaeology, Government of Tamilnadu (1970).
- R. Nagaswamy, Masterpieces of Early South Indian Bronzes, National Museum (New Delhi, 1983).
- R. Sivaram, Early Chola Art (New Delhi, 1994).
- S.K. Govindaswamy, 'Cola Paintings', Jour., Ind. Soc. Oriental Art, I, no.2 (1935).
- S.R. Balasumbrahmanyam, Four Chola Temples (Bombay, 1963).
- S.R. Balasumbrahmanyam, Early Chola Art (Bombay, 1966).
- S.R. Balasumbrahmanyam, Early Chola Art (New Delhi, 1971).
- S.R. Balasumbrahmanyam, Middle Chola Temples (New Delhi, 1975).
- S.R. Balasumbrahmanyam, Later Chola Art (Chennai, 1979).
- The Great Living Chola Temples at Thanjavur, Gangaikondacholapuram & Darasuram, A proposal to extend the World Heritage Monument of the Brihadisvara temple complex at Thanjavur to include the Brihadisvara temple complex at Gangaikondacholapuram and the Airavatesvara temple complex at Darasuram, Archaeological Survey of India (New Delhi, 2002).

